AN account of the origin of the Jaudon family may be had by referring to the Memoir of Daniel Jaudon.¹⁵

Two Jaudons settled in this country,—Peter, who settled in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and Elie Jaudon, who settled in Charleston, South Carolina. The latter came from the Isle of Ré, a small Island opposite Soubise, in the Bay of Biscay, at the mouth of the Charente River; the former came from Soubise, and though the exact relationship of the two has not been ascertained, there is no doubt of their relationship. Yet on account of the missing link I have decided to refer only to the descendants of the Pennsylvania settler, leaving an account of the South Carolina settler and his descendants to one of their number.

The first member of the family whom we have reference to was François Jaudon.

“ Know all men to whom these presents shall come that on this second day of September one thousand six hundred and forty-three, at noon, before me the undersigned notary, in the presence of the hereinafter named witnesses, an agreement was made and public notice given of the marriage spoken of to be entered upon, and if God please to be performed, between the parties of PIERRE JAUDON, saltmaker, natural and legitimate son of François Jaudon a Vine grower, and Marie Roy, his father and mother, residing in the parish of Maise, of the one part, and MARTHE RANVAU, natural and legitimate daughter of Jean Ranvau and Julienne Rolle, her father and mother, residing at Maise aforesaid, of the other part.

“ The said parties to be married desire of their own free will to give proof that such was and is their pleasure, and that, although of age and masters of their own rights, they have nevertheless been licensed and authorized thereto by a council of their nearest relatives, to wit, the party of the first part, by his brother of the whole blood Daniel Jaudon ; his second cousin Simon Givandrau, Junior ; his cousin of the same degree Marie Givandrau ; his cousin of the same degree Thomas Voyé and his wife Marthe Givandrau ; and his cousin of the same degree Joel Givandrau ;—and the party of the second part, by her said father and mother Pierre¹ Ranvau and Julienne Rolle ; her brothers of the whole blood Pierre, Jean, and Elie Ranvau ; her brother in law Pierre Guynet as husband and consort of Marie Ranvau, the latter being also present ; her first cousin Moses Gourbeil ; her uncle on mother's side master Daniel Abaud ; her cousin by marriage Jean Chaillolleau ; her first cousin Elie Delunir ; her first cousins Pierre Voyer, Jean Bouquet, and Elie Dunal, as husbands of Susan, Marie, and Elisabeth Ranvau ; her first cousins Jeanne, Judith, and Marthe Ranvau ; Paula Voyer, a son of her said first cousin Pierre ; Jean and Mathurin Cricauld, sons of the said Judith Ranvau, and of the same degree as the said Paula ; her nephews Jean and Pierre Ranvau ; her nephew Pierre Guynet ; and her friend Jean Rince,—and others of their relatives and friends convened and assembled.

make demand through their relatives and friends, that the rites of the church to which the parties profess to belong, be previously held and observed.

“At the making of this agreement of marriage were personally present the said Jean Ranvau and Julienne Rolle, father and mother of the party of the second part, who of their own free will have promised and bound themselves to give as a dower to the said party of the second part, on the next coming feast of Easter, a sum of One hundred pounds (Tours currency); which sum shall be paid to the said party of the second part in the form of furniture to be contributed by her toward the community of goods agreed upon between her and the party of the first part, and for the receipt of which sum the parties shall be bound to give an acquittance to the donors.

“The said party of the first part has made declaration that he has in his possession a like sum of One hundred pounds which shall also enter into the said community of goods agreed upon between him and the party of the second part.

“In consideration of their proposed marriage the said parties bring together by halves all real and personal estate of which they shall be possessed on the day of their nuptials, and which they shall acquire during their union and marriage, according to the custom of the present district. And in case the party of the first part should die before the party of the second part the latter shall have the right either to continue the said community of goods, or to renounce it,—for the decision of which a term of three months is granted her, notwithstanding custom allows only eight days, which custom, as regards the said term for renouncement, the parties do waive. And if the party of the second part should renounce she shall take back each and every thing which she can prove by receipts or otherwise to have brought in, and intrusted to, the said community of goods, together with her wearing apparel, rings, and other things destined for her personal use. Her claims shall be preferred to, and be paid before those of, any other creditors, and she shall be kept and wholly provided for at the expense of the said community of goods until settlement, without impairing her aforesaid rights.

“All the foregoing the said parties of both parts have thus consented to, agreed upon, stipulated and wholly accepted, promising to keep the same without violation, under penalty of all costs, damages, and interests, and under pledge of all their real and personal property, present and future; renouncing and condemning anything done to the contrary thereof without their consent and will.

“The said parties to be married have promised, as they shall be united, to take one another as husband and wife, baron and feme, once for all, and they request, or make demand through their said relatives and friends, that the rites of the so-called Reformed Church (of which the parties previously make profession) be kept and observed, and that the wedding feast be plain and entire.

“And was personally present here the said Elisabeth Moreau, residing at the said borough of Saint-Froul, mother of the party of the second part, who has given and made over to this party, as a dower and part of her hereditary portion in advance, in expectancy of future succession, the use or usufruct of seven acres of red vineyard situate at the fief of Chaillon, held from the chapter of Saint-Peter of Soubize for one seventh of the fruits and one twenty fifth as right of tithes, which the party of the first part, Daniel Jaudon, says he knows well; besides a chest of pine wood of three bushels, according to the measure of the present principality, and two pieces of half worn sheet linen, which chest and pieces of linen have been appraised by the said Pierre Ranvau and Rambaud at the sum of fourteen pounds.

“And as regards the said party of the first part, he shall settle with his aforesaid sisters each and all of their common claims and actions, goods and chattels, wheresoever situate and of whatsoever nature they may be, either real or personal, of which latter an inventory shall be made by the undersigned notary and witnesses within two weeks from to-day, according to the appraisement to be made by the said Pierre Ranvau and Louis Geneuil, near relatives of the said parties. Partition of the same shall be previously made between the said party of the first part and his sisters, the said Jeanne and Elisabeth Jaudon.

“In case of decease of the said Elisabeth Moreau, mother of the party of the second part, both parties shall be obliged to return to her estate the dower hereinabove settled upon the party of the second part, or the exact value of the same, in order to be divided by halves and equal shares between these parties and the aforesaid Pierre Gazeau.

“In expectation and consideration of all the foregoing, the said parties to be married have constituted and established, and do constitute and establish, a community of goods bringing together by halves all real and personal property which they now have and which they shall acquire during their said marriage. And if it should happen that the party of the first part should die before the party of the second part, the latter shall have the choice and option either to continue the community of goods agreed upon between them, or to renounce it,—to decide which a term of three months is granted her,

The translator of the marriage contracts remarks “that the manufacture of salt was and still is an important branch of industry in France; that in former centuries this branch was a monopoly of the government, and that the officers under whose direction and supervision salt was made and sold were appointed by the king, who selected them from the wealthy and landed gentry of the salt districts. The position of ‘Saulnier’ was a distinguished one and very much sought for.”

* Memoir of Mr. Daniel Jaudon, who died in Philadelphia, July 23, 1826.

The subject of this memoir was descended from the Huguenots, or Prot-estants of France, who were compelled to leave their country by the revocation of the edict of Nantes in the year 1685. The residence of the family was near Rochelle, on the Bay of Biscay. It was both an opulent and pious family; but by the cruel persecution which took place under Louis XIV. all its property was confiscated, and the members thought themselves happy in escaping with their lives into England. After a short residence in Britain they migrated into America, and settled in Bucks Co., Pa. Peter Jaudon, the eldest son of the second generation after the settlement in this country, married into the Wayne family of Chester Co. He was the father of the deceased, who was born at Mount Pleasant in Bucks Co., July 7, 1767. His early education was partly in Philadelphia and partly at Germantown, and was such only as is obtained in a well-taught English school. At the age of sixteen he engaged in the study of medicine, which, however, was soon interrupted by the death of the physician who had received him as a pupil. He then taught an English school in the country for the space of two or three years. But his father having removed to the Northern Liberties of Philadelphia and become a member of the Second Presbyterian congregation, earnestly solicited the then junior pastor of that congregation, the Rev. Ashbel Green, to assist his son in the acquisition of classical learning, on which at this time he was eagerly intent. He studied the Latin language with great assiduity for nearly two years, and acquired such a knowledge of it as to be able to write it with correctness and facility. His method of study, under the direction of his teacher, was to make himself perfect in elementary principles, and then to attain a like perfection in every gradation of advance before he proceeded to a new step; and this method he afterwards observed in conducting all the studies which he superintended in the Female Academy which he taught for thirty years, and from which his pupils reaped uncommon benefit, as well as himself an unrivalled reputation as a teacher. It was his intention, while engaged in classical studies, to devote himself to the gospel ministry. But the interruption occasioned by the yellow fever of 1793 (referring to his father's death), and some other hinderances, caused him to resign his views to the ministry and to relinquish his classical studies. He married, and engaged as the teacher of the English department in the College and Academy of Philadelphia, in the beginning of the year 1794. In this employment he continued till some time in the year 1796, when he established his Seminary for Young Ladies; in the superintendence and instruction of which he spent the remainder of his days. The confinement and exhausting nature of his occupation, prosecuted as it was by him with unceasing industry and conscientious vigilance, impaired his health, which was habitually delicate, and sometimes seriously interrupted during the last fifteen years of his life. With a view to recruit his strength and spirits, it was his custom to spend the time of the summer vacation of his seminary in travelling. He returned from an excursion for health to the noted resort at Long Branch, on the sea-coast of New Jersey, on the 7th of July, the day on which he completed the fifty-ninth year of his age. He supposed that he had derived sensible benefit from this excursion, and spoke of his feeling unusually well. But truly in the midst of life we are in death,—the very day after his return he was seized with bilious remittent fever, which afterwards assumed a typhus or putrid character, and, notwithstanding all the medical skill that was employed to arrest its progress, it terminated his mortal existence in about two weeks. On the 25th of the month his remains, attended by his mourning family and a concourse of sympathizing friends, were committed to their kindred dust. Such is the brief narrative of the descent, parentage, education, occupation, death, and burial of Mr. Daniel Jaudon,—a narrative which the writer has chosen not to interrupt with remarks, and which, it will be perceived, contains nothing of the nature of adventure or of striking peculiarity. No interesting scenes or changes; nothing of strange occurrence; nothing but the recital of events which mark the ordinary course of human life; and yet it is the narrative of a life distinguished by piety and by uncommon usefulness; of a life which many monarchs and heroes and sages, who have filled the world with their fame, will one day regard with envy, and wish in vain that such had been their own. The distinguishing features of Mr. Jaudon's mind were manifested in sound sense, clear perceptions, accurate discrimination, and correct judgment. He had acquired a considerable fund of knowledge on a variety of subjects; but the books which he chiefly read were of the religious kind, and those which either immediately or remotely related to his professional occupation as a teacher of youth. He was thoroughly grounded and settled in the principles of evangelical piety, or those which are usually denominated the doctrines of grace,—the doctrines of the Protestant Reformation. Yet he was not a bigot. On the contrary, he cherished the most friendly feelings towards all who appeared truly to love the Saviour, by whatsoever name distinguished; took pleasure in their company and conversation, and joined with them cordially in forming and executing plans of benevolence and public utility. The piety of Mr. Jaudon was of the most excellent kind; it pervaded his whole heart, character, and life. It was deep, fervent, and humble. There was in it no approach to enthusiasm, and nothing like self-complacency or spiritual pride. Few men were more modest or self-emptied than he; and yet he was remarkably firm in principle and active in doing good, viewing himself and all that he had as devoted to the glory and service of God. He was eminently discreet and prudent, desirous of avoiding the appearance of evil, and anxious to adorn the religion he professed by a temper and deportment becoming the gospel of Christ. He first made a public profession of religion in the year 1792, when, not having been baptized in infancy, he was publicly baptized and admitted to full communion in the Second Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. In process of time his piety and prudence pointed him out as one well qualified to exercise the office of a ruling elder, to which he was accordingly chosen and set apart; and some years afterwards he was appointed to discharge the duties of a deacon, in connection with those of an elder. In distributing the alms of the church, and in visiting, counselling, and consoling the poor, especially the pious poor, of the congregation to which he belonged, he was faithful, diligent, tender, and sympathizing. Long will his kindness, condescension, and benevolence be remembered by the poor and afflicted, and his memory be embalmed by their gratitude and love. And long will the session of the church of which he was a member regret the loss of a most valued associate; who aided them by his wise counsels, and took his full share in every official duty common to them and him in the government and discipline of the church, and in promoting its interest and edification.

The subject of this memoir had no taste for public and promiscuous companies; of course avoided them as much as he conveniently could. But he was peculiarly formed for private friendship; he relished its pleasures highly, and shared largely in all the delights and benefits which it affords. He had a number of attached religious friends, with whom he lived on terms of great intimacy, to whom he was wont to unbosom himself freely, and to whom he imparted not less of happiness and profit than he received. He was also a most efficient member of several pious and benevolent associations, which we cannot particularize. We must, however, not omit to notice distinctly his activity and usefulness as a member of the Magdalen Society of Philadelphia. In that society his zeal and efforts to reclaim, and to restore to virtue, the unhappy subjects of the society's care and benevolence were peculiarly great; and under the divine blessing they were, in several instances, happily successful. His was the office, more frequently perhaps than that of any other member, to converse with the wretched wanderers from the path of rectitude and purity; to endeavor to convince them deeply and effectually of their folly and their guilt; and when humbled and penitent, to direct them to that precious Saviour, in whose atoning blood all their stains and pollutions might be washed away. Some of them, there is good reason to believe, were, through the instrumentality of this devoted man, made the subjects of the renewing grace of God; were restored to reputable society, and made candidates for meeting with their kind benefactor in the mansions of eternal purity and peace. In all the relations of husband, father, and friend, let it suffice to say, in general, that Mr. Jaudon was truly exemplary, eminently kind, affectionate, and faithful. By the smiles of a gracious Providence on his unceasing industry and care he acquired a handsome property, and has left a comfortable provision for his desolate widow and a family of nine children,—five sons and four daughters,—who we trust will recollect that, in his example, instruction, counsel, and prayers, he has left them the best part of their inheritance. Three of his sons were liberally educated, and a fourth was, at his death, engaged in acquiring the elements of such an education. It remains to take a brief view of this excellent man, in his professional occupation, as a teacher of female youth. Here was the chief field of his usefulness; and he was very sensible that whatever good he might do in promoting the temporal and eternal happiness of mankind, by improving, for that purpose, every method and every occasion which might incidentally be offered, still it was in his professional employment that he was to expect and seek to serve God and his generation with the most extensive effect. Under this conviction, Mr. Jaudon endeavored to qualify himself as a teacher to the extent of his powers. He not only made himself perfectly familiar with every branch of study which he was to teach, but he sought for the best method of communicating knowledge to his pupils, and the best system of government and discipline for his seminary. He read on these subjects every book to which he could obtain access, conversed freely with all from whom he could receive useful information, and observed carefully how various institutions of learning were conducted, that he might transfer from them to his own everything which he thought might be profitable. In some of the branches which he taught he compiled, with great diligence and accuracy, a system of his own for the benefit of his pupils; and in his selections from the labors of others, he was careful that none but the best books extant should be put into the hands of those whom he taught.

Indeed, his reputation as a teacher became such that the publishers of school-books in our country often solicited his recommendation, regarding it as one of the most valuable they could receive. But the scholars of Mr. Jaudon received benefit from something more than his choice for them of the best methods and systems of instruction. These are of little use, without a laborious and constant attention by the preceptor to see that each individual pupil actually learns what a good system is intended to teach. It is this detail of attention and inspection, and patient and persevering industry in communicating knowledge and seeing that it is acquired, which profits the learner, while it is also sure to exhaust the teacher; and this was eminently exemplified in Mr. Jaudon. Aided, as he always was, by able assistants, he still spared no exertions of his own, and constantly wasted his strength and spirits in a pointed attention to everything which passed in his school. Hence he was able to offer his scholars, at his stated examinations, to any trial on the branches studied to which the visitors might choose to call them; and to the visitors the examination, whenever they could be persuaded to assume it, was wholly resigned. His pupils were prepared not merely to answer a set of questions to be asked by their teacher, but to discover a real knowledge of the subject of study. It was not a book, but a branch of science, on which they presented themselves for trial; and if questions were intelligibly and fairly put, it mattered not as to the method in which, or the persons by whom, it was done. The result of all this qualification, and diligence, and conscientiousness in the principal of a public school was such as might be expected. It came to be considered as a high privilege to obtain a place in his seminary. He was often obliged to refuse the most pressing solicitations for immediate admission, and to register the names of the applicants, as candidates for entrance, so soon as a place for them should be made by the dismissal, on the completion of their course, of those who composed his highest class. An institution of this character, continued for thirty years, could not but send forth into society a large number of the best educated women: and it is, accordingly, a well-known fact that a very considerable proportion of the women of this character now in the city of Philadelphia and many in other places have been the pupils of Mr. Jaudon. To them his memory is exceedingly precious. They cherish it with a love and veneration far more estimable than the shouts and illuminations which celebrate the exploits of the military hero. But Mr. Jaudon was never satisfied with the mere intellectual attainments of his scholars, distinguished as they certainly were. He looked at every pupil as the possessor of an immortal spirit, destined to happiness or misery inconceivable and endless; and as probably one, too, whose moral and religious principles and character would have a lasting influence on her offspring,—an influence which might extend not only to the latest generation on earth, but to all the ages of eternity. Hence it was that, with unceasing solicitude, he sought to promote the spiritual interests, the salvation of the immortal part of all who were committed to his care. This he attempted by a plan which neither gave up the essentials of religion to the claims of a misnamed charity, on the one hand, nor, on the other, intrenched further than was unavoidable on the peculiarities of the different religious sects to which the parents of his pupils belonged, and he had the satisfaction to find that the execution of this plan rarely, if ever, gave offence to any of the parties concerned. It was his invariable practice to open the morning and afternoon exercises of his school by singing a psalm or hymn, in which he was cheerfully joined by his pupils; and after this, by solemn prayer, in which he fervently implored the divine guidance for himself and the divine influence for them. Between these exercises he frequently delivered a short lecture to his scholars on their religious concerns, insisting on the leading and essential topics of doctrinal and practical piety. A portion of Scripture was always a part of the lesson assigned on Saturday, to be studied on Sunday, and recited on Monday; and it was generally required that each young lady should repeat the text from which she had heard a discourse on the previous Sabbath. Such was the method in which he labored to benefit his interesting charge in reference to their spiritual welfare while he was imbuing their minds with useful and ornamental science; and it is believed that there are hundreds now living who would feelingly acknowledge the benefit which they received from their venerated teacher, by mixing moral and religious instruction and counsel with the studies by which their intellectual furniture was constantly increased. The death of such a man as Mr. Jaudon is a public loss, which is deeply felt and deplored by many besides his family and his pupils. But he had finished the period allotted for his labors on earth, and has entered, we doubt not, into “the rest that remaineth to the people of God.”

“It is hoped that this memoir will not only gratify the wishes of kindred and friends, but serve the higher purpose of presenting a useful example for the imitation of others. It may serve to show that good sense, sound discretion, diligence in duty, and fervent piety may effect more, unspeakably more, both for the good of mankind and the advantage of the possessor, than is ever achieved, in the absence of the qualities, by the most brilliant genius, the most vigorous intellect, or the profoundest erudition. There are many who may be what Mr. Jaudon actually was. Let them be so, and they will be useful and beloved while they live and their death will be to them an eternal gain.”

Orphans' Court, Philada., Docket No. 35, 1835-37, p. 35; Nov. 20, 1835, No. 70, the settlement of the account of the estate of Daniel Jaudon, deceased; p. 121, Feb. 19, 1836, No. 34, copy of the settlement of the estate of Daniel Jaudon, deceased, was presented to the Court and confirmed by agreement.

The National Assembly of France passed a decree the 15th of December, 1790, restoring the property of all the Huguenots that had been confiscated. (There is a copy of this decree in possession of William Bainbridge Jaudon, of New York.)

Daniel Jaudon made an attempt by virtue of this decree to recover property which he claimed as heir. A perusal of the following will explain the effort :

Copy of letter from Daniel Jaudon¹⁵ to Isaac Snowden, Jr. :

"Sir,

"My great grandfather's father, Daniel Jaudon & his familye, left France in the reign, I think, of Louis 14th being persecuted on account of their religion; when the property of said Daniel Jaudon was seized upon as confiscated to the Crown.

"The National Assembly of France is said to have passed a Decree on or about the 19th of December 1790, to restore all such property to the heirs or descendants of all such Protestant Refugees.

"This Decree limits the time for replevying such estates to three years from the publishing of the Decree (art 2.) and in article 20th adds that all such lands as may have had no legal claimants within the time specified, shall be sold & the monies put to interest or deposited in the Bank for extraordinaries, in order to be restored without interest whenever claim may be made & the heirship proven.

"In article 19th the same Decree directs a table of these estates with a reference to their situations & the names of their original proprietors, who fled their Country, to be drawn up, printed and sent to each Local jurisdiction, there to be pasted up and registered.

"The property I wish to know about lies, as I have understood, in the Province of Saintonge, in the West of France & must have been taken as the property of Daniel Jaudon, perhaps in part, of Peter, his only son.

"Please to make yourself as thoroughly acquainted as possible with the truth of this Decree—the best mode of coming at such property & the time given (if any limited) for applying for it. According to the terms of the Decree, as we have it, the property in contemplation, must have been sold &, perhaps the money deposited in the Bank for extraordinaries, above mentioned. If you can find where such Bank is, it may be, you will be able to ascertain all the particulars of the Amt. original proprietors &c. If upon inquiry, you think there is any probability of finding any word of such a

Peter Jaudon,¹³ father of Daniel,¹⁵ died in 1793; therefore, as his own deposition could not be taken that he was heir, Elizabeth States was called upon to testify to that effect in order to prove Daniel's¹⁵ right to the property.
